PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE WRITES OF TORTURE

In a letter addressed to his wife and published on a news website on 1 November, prisoner of conscience Ildar Dadin revealed that prison staff, including the director of the prison colony in Segezha, in the Karelia region of Russia, have beaten and tortured him since his arrival on 10 September.

Activist Ildar Dadin was imprisoned on 7 December 2015 after being sentenced to three years for “repeated violations of the law on public assemblies” (Article 212.1 of the Russian Criminal Code). His sentence was reduced on appeal to two-and-a-half years on 31 March 2016. In a letter sent to his wife and published on a news website on 1 November, Ildar Dadin describes his ordeal since his arrival at the prison colony in Segezha in Russia’s Karelia region on 10 September, including severe beatings, rape threats, other torture and other ill-treatment.

Ildar Dadin is a prisoner of conscience. He is the first person in Russia to be sentenced under Article 212.1, which effectively criminalizes peaceful demonstrations by making it a crime to violate Russia’s highly restrictive Law on Public Assemblies more than twice in 180 days. Ildar Dadin was found guilty of participation in four street actions in 2014, all of which were peaceful.

In a letter to his wife, dictated to his lawyer, he recounts how he was immediately placed in the punishment cell on arrival in Segezha prison colony after prison guards purportedly found two razor blades among his possessions. He declared a hunger strike in protest. He describes how on 11 September he was beaten and kicked four times by groups of 10-12 prison guards, including on one occasion by the director of the prison colony. After his third beating, he claims, his head was pushed down the toilet in the prison cell, and he was threatened with rape. On 12 September he was hung by handcuffs to force him to end his hunger strike. The prison director threatened him in the presence of other officers that if he did not stop his hunger strike he would be “buried on the other side of the prison fence”. Ildar Dadin has been placed in the punishment cell seven times since his arrival in the prison colony. According to Ildar Dadin, the beatings have continued, and the same treatment is meted out to other prisoners. Torture and other ill-treatment had been reported in Segezha prison colony in the past.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Ildar Dadin was arrested on 15 January 2015 when he was holding a picket in support of Charlie Hebdo (a French satirical weekly magazine that suffered an armed attack in January 2015). Although this was a single-person picket, which is the only form of street protest that does not require prior approval by the authorities in Russia, he was accused of holding an “unauthorised” public assembly. Under Russian law, when committed the first time, this is an administrative violation and Ildar Dadin was sentenced to 15 days in detention.

On the last day of his detention he was brought to Basmannyi Court in Moscow to be tried for a similar “offense” in relation to a peaceful protest on 5 December 2014. Instead, the judge ruled that Ildar Dadid should face criminal proceedings because he had been repeatedly arrested for “unauthorised” public assemblies. A criminal case was opened against Ildar Dadin on the same day, and on 3 February 2015 he was placed under house arrest.

He was convicted on 7 December 2015, sentenced to three-year imprisonment, and immediately taken into custody. On appeal, his sentence was reduced to two-and-a-half years, but his conviction was upheld.
