

URGENT ACTION

MASS RAID AND DETENTION OF LGBTI PEOPLE IN BAKU

On 22 September, Azerbaijani police conducted numerous raids on LGBTI individuals in Baku, detaining more than 100 people. While some were released, at least 48 individuals were placed in between 10 and 20 day-long administrative detention for purportedly resisting police. Those detained were denied access to lawyers of their own choosing and some allege ill-treatment by the police.

More than 100 LGBTI individuals were rounded up by the police in public spaces, and detained on 22 September. While some were released, at least 48 people - whose identities are known to Amnesty International - were sentenced to administrative detention, ranging from 10 to 20 days. They were accused of resisting the police's legitimate orders, and found guilty on the basis of the police's allegations, without any further evidence. During the summary hearings the detainees were denied fair trial guarantees as their request for access to lawyers of their own choosing was denied, and instead given state-appointed lawyers. The detainees allege they were beaten by the police and faced other ill-treatment while in custody.

International media quoted a representative of the Azerbaijani Ministry of Internal Affairs justifying the police raid by claiming it was initiated in response to multiple complaints made by local residents that LGBTI people were not "respecting others around them". The representative said police approached only those LGBTI individuals who made no attempt to conceal their sexual orientation or gender identity in public, adding that many of those detained are HIV positive and have other sexually transmitted diseases, making them dangerous for the health of the people around them. The raid appeared to target LGBTI individuals exclusively and be a deliberate attempt by the authorities to intimidate LGBTI persons in Azerbaijan.

URGENT ACTION

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Consensual sex between adult men was decriminalised in Azerbaijan in 2000. However, strong negative attitudes towards LGBTI people are common in Azerbaijan. As a result of the general crackdown on civil society and societal homophobia and transphobia, Azerbaijan lacks a visible LGBTI movement.

Amnesty International has documented a growing number of cases of increasingly serious harassment, intimidation and persecution of different human rights defenders and activists by the Azerbaijani authorities in recent years. The string of arrests and various forms of harassment of prominent human rights defenders and other civil society activists, in connection with their professional activities, has effectively paralyzed civil society in Azerbaijan.
