

URGENT ACTION

PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE NEEDS MEDICAL CARE

Prisoner of conscience Villca Fernández has been scheduled to be transferred to hospital to receive specialized medical treatment since June 2017. Doctors requested his transfer to hospital and the Attorney General's Office issued an order to this effect which has not yet been executed. His transfer was postponed for the fifth time in November while his health continues to deteriorate.

Villca Fernández, an activist and leader of the student movement in the state of Mérida, western Venezuela, was arbitrarily detained on 31 January 2016 hours after he published a tweet replying to a senior government official who had publicly accused him of being part of a conspiracy on national television. He is being unlawfully held in the National Bolivarian Intelligence Service (Servicio Bolivariano de Inteligencia Nacional, SEBIN) facilities in Caracas, the capital. He is a prisoner of conscience and should be immediately and unconditionally released.

Whilst in SEBIN custody, Villca Fernández has suffered from a range of ailments, including hypertension, bronchitis, back pains, and gastrointestinal problems. Doctors inside SEBIN facilities performed his most recent medical exam on 7 December 2017, and urged his transfer to a specialized hospital that could adequately assess and treat his cardiac problems. An order from the Attorney General's Office for his transfer to hospital has been postponed by SEBIN officers five times.

According to information received by Amnesty International, Villca Fernández has also suffered a number of violations to his right to due process and to his right to not be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment. Villca Fernández's relatives told Amnesty International that SEBIN officials have often denied them access to see him for extended periods of time, most recently for over four weeks between October and November. They have also denied Villca Fernández access to sunlight for weeks at a time. The start of his trial is unjustifiably pending after almost two years.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Villca Fernández is a young civil and political rights activist, and leader of the student movement in the state of Mérida, western Venezuela. He is a student at the University of Los Andes, where he studies political sciences.

Villca Fernández was arrested on 31 January 2016 by officers of the National Bolivarian Intelligence Service (SEBIN). Since then, he has been unjustly detained in 'El Helicoide', one of SEBIN's facilities in Caracas.

On 27 January 2016, a senior government official publicly named him during a television programme, accusing him of 'conspiring to topple the government'. Four days later, Villca Fernández published a tweet stating he "wasn't afraid" of this government official, and that his days in power were "numbered". Hours after this tweet was published, SEBIN officers arrested him at a street fair. The officers who arrested Villca Fernández did not have a warrant for his arrest, nor did his arrest comply with the requirements established by Venezuelan law. His arrest constituted an arbitrary detention that continues to this day.

The Attorney General's Office accused Villca Fernández of "inciting hate" (incitación al odio) and "divulging false information" (divulgación de información falsa). Amnesty International believes this accusation was politically motivated. His trial has yet to begin after almost two years.
