ATTACK AGAINST INDIGENOUS DEFENDER

Patricia Gualinga, Indigenous human rights defender, reported that on 5 January an unknown man attacked her home in Puyo, Pastaza province, throwing stones at the windows while yelling death threats against her.

Early morning on 5 January, an unknown man attacked Patricia Gualinga's home in Puyo, Pastaza province, throwing stones at the windows while yelling death threats at her. At that time, Patricia Gualinga was at home with her parents and child. That same day she reported the incident to the National Police and filed a complaint before the Attorney General's Office of Pastaza province. To date, Patricia Gualinga and her family have not received any protection measures and there has been no significant progress in the investigation.

Patricia Gualinga is a Kichwa leader of the Sarayaku Indigenous Peoples, whose ancestral lands are located in eastern Ecuador. She works to defend rights related to land, territory and the environment in the context of extractive projects in the Ecuadorian Amazon, including oil concessions in the ancestral lands of Indigenous Peoples such as of the Kichwa of Sarayaku, the Sápara, Achuar Shuar, Shiwiar, the communities of Santa Clara, San Jacinto and the cities of Puyo and Shell-Mera.

Many Indigenous leaders and human rights defenders from the aforementioned communities have expressed their concerns regarding the effects that oil exploration and extraction could have on their lands, territories and water sources, such as the Villano and Curaray river basins, and have previously reported threats and harassment as a consequence of their human rights work. In December 2017, after days of mobilizations and a meeting with the Ecuadorian Confederation of Indigenous Nationalities (Conaie), President Lenin Morales promised the suspension of new oil and mining concessions in Indigenous lands that have been accorded without "prior consultation".

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

In June 2012, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR) issued a judgment against Ecuador in a case concerning the Sarayaku Indigenous People, after a foreign oil company was allowed to encroach on their traditional lands in the early 2000s without consultation with the Sarayaku. The IACtHR found that the Ecuadorian state violated the community's right to be consulted, as well as their community property rights and their cultural identity. The Court also found Ecuador responsible for putting the life and physical integrity of the Sarayaku at grave risk, after the oil company placed more than 1,400 kg of high-grade explosives on the Indigenous People's territory. Ecuador has not yet fully complied with the judgment. Patricia Gualinga was a key leader throughout this process.
