DEFENDER'S DETENTION EXTENDED AGAIN

The pre-trial detention of Oyub Titiev, a prisoner of conscience and head of the Grozny office of the Russian human rights group Memorial, has been extended for another month, until 9 June. The Supreme Court of the Chechen Republic rejected an appeal against the extension.

On 25 April, the Staropromyslovsky District Court in the Chechen capital, Grozny, extended Oyub Titiev's pre-trial detention for another month, until 9 June. Oyub Titiev's lawyers had not been duly informed in advance about the upcoming hearing and only one lawyer of the three lawyers representing Oyub Titiev, who happened to be in Chechnya at the time, was able to attend. The investigator claimed that the HRD might abscond and thus must be held on remand because "there is no house at the place of his registration and his relatives left Chechnya". Notably, in February, it was the Chechen authorities who demolished Oyub Titiev's house, together with 35 houses in the neighbourhood, to make way for a new development, while his family had left Chechnya in January due to the threats they had received.

On 3 May the Supreme Court of the Chechen Republic started a hearing of Oyub Titiev's appeal against the extension. On the first day of the hearings, Oyub Titiev was not brought to the court and was connected through a video chat from pre-trial detention centre. Following the lawyers' petitions the judge ruled that the hearing must be adjourned until 4 May. On the next day, Oyub Titiev was brought to the court in person and his defence team presented personal guarantees from some prominent public figures that if released on bail, Oyub Titiev would not abscond. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court rejected the appeal and ruled that the HRD must remain on remand. On the same day, the investigator served Oyub Titiev with final charges under Article 228, part 2 of the Russian Criminal Code for possession of large quantity of drugs. The investigation is now over and Oyub Titiev's colleagues from Memorial believe that his trial might start very soon in order to finalize the case before the Football World Cup which will start in Russia on 14 June. Representatives of Amnesty International attended the court hearing in Grozny on 3 May. Oyub Titiev's friends, colleagues and relatives, about 40 people in total including about 15 attendees from Moscow and other cities, used the opportunity to send their solidarity messages to the human rights defender.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

On 9 January, Oyub Titiev was arrested and held incommunicado for several hours after his car had been stopped and searched on his way to work. The Ministry of Interior confirmed that Oyub Titiev was arrested after "approximately 180 grams of a substance with a specific marijuana odour" was found in his car during the search. Oyub Titiev denied the allegations and insisted that the drugs had been planted in his car. He stands accused under Article 228 of the Russian Criminal Code for unlawful possession of drug substances. If found guilty, he could face up to 10 years in prison. In March, his detention was extended until 9 May on the grounds that Oyub Titiev could abscond and might pose a threat to the judicial process by putting pressure on witnesses and destroying evidence.

The pressure from the authorities on both Oyub Titiev's family and colleagues at Memorial has escalated during his detention. His family have been harassed by the police and, as a result, forced to leave Chechnya. Meanwhile, his lawyer reported being followed by plain-clothed security service operatives. There have also been several attacks against Memorial's offices in the North Caucasus. On the night of 17 January, unidentified masked men set Memorial's office in the neighbouring Republic of Ingushetia on fire. On 19 January, police conducted a search of Memorial's office in Grozny. The Memorial staff fear that some further "evidence" found during the search (unfamiliar cigarette butts contaminated with an unknown substance) could have been planted to incriminate Oyub Titiev. On 22 January, a car, which had been used by Oyub Titiev's lawyer, was set on fire outside Memorial's office in Dagestan. Around the same time, staff members there reported receiving death threats on their phones. On 28 March, Sirazhutdin Datsiev, the Head of Memorial's office in Dagestan, was attacked and badly beaten by an unidentified man. Amnesty International believes that these incidents were connected with the persecution of Oyub Titiev in Chechnya.

Oyub Titiev's colleagues believe that his detention is an attempt by the authorities to stop him from doing his legitimate human rights work.

Oyub Titiev has been working in the Grozny office of Memorial for many years and has been threatened on numerous occasions in connection with his human rights work. He became Head of the office shortly after the murder of human rights defender and Memorial staff member, Natalia Estemirova, in 2009. Following her killing, many of Memorial's staff members had to leave the country fearing for their lives, and Memorial had to suspend its work in Chechnya for five months.
