

URGENT ACTION

200 FAMILIES AT RISK OF FORCED EVICTION

200 families are at imminent risk forced eviction in the Guahory Campesino Community, Caaguazú department, Eastern Paraguay.

According to public information, on 13 July 2018, about 400 police officers were deployed in the Guahory Campesino Community after the decision of the attorneys in charge of the process to implement the Joint Action Plan on Punishable Actions related to Trespass (Plan de Acción Conjunta para Hechos Punibles de Invasión de Inmueble Ajeno). Amnesty International has identified that this procedure leads to veiled forced evictions, carried out without due safeguards to respect and protect the right to decent housing.

Forced evictions could initiate at any time, violating the rights to due process and adequate housing of hundreds of people, including dozens of children who live in the community. Amnesty International is also concerned that these forced evictions could escalate into violence, as has happened in the previous eviction operations carried out in the Guahory Campesino Community in 2016 and 2017.

Families in the Guahory Campesino Community are asserting their right to food and decent housing in the context of access to land and agrarian reform in Paraguay. The ownership of the lands where they live has not been determined by any judicial authority.

1) TAKE ACTION

Write a letter, send an email, call, fax or tweet:

- Refrain from forcibly evicting people living in the Guahory Campesino Community;
- Repeal the Joint Action Plan on Punishable Actions related to Trespass (Plan de Acción Conjunta para Hechos Punibles de Invasión de Inmueble Ajeno), which is incompatible with the rights to due process and adequate housing.
- Provide full detailed information (including the number of law enforcement officials involved, the measures taken by them and the dates) on this attempt to implement the Joint Action Plan in the Guahory community.

Contact these two officials by 30 August, 2018:

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

On 15 September 2016, a prosecutor accompanied by about 1,200 police officers using tractors forcibly evicted people from the Guahory Campesino Community. According to campesino families, their houses and crops were destroyed. There was no discussion and no eviction order was handed over. Officials and community representatives reported that private individuals took part.

On 3 January 2017, houses and crops in the Guahory Campesino Community were again destroyed in a second eviction operation. Twelve people were arrested, including three adolescents, who were released at midnight and accused of trespass. Men, women, boys and girls reported the police beat them and attacked them with tear gas. Some police officers told them: "the campesinos are trash and don't want to work" and to "stop hanging around with campesinos if they wanted to stay out of trouble".

According to the Paraguay Human Rights Coordinating Group (Coordinadora de Derechos Humanos del Paraguay, CODEHUPY) and campesinos from Guahory, other evictions occurred in February and October 2015 and in December 2016.

The Joint Action Plan on Punishable Actions related to Trespass is an agreement between the Attorney General's Office, the Ministry of the Interior and the National Police on 28 March 2012, updated on 20 March 2017, which sets out the actions these three bodies will take to stop the potential trespass on property. The Attorney General's Office, the body in charge of the criminal investigation, does not define property ownership; this is the remit of the judicial authorities, who define it using civil and agrarian procedures. As a result, there is a risk that forced evictions may be carried out in relation to properties whose ownership is still to be established.
