Alseny Farinta Camara, Boubacar Diallo and Moussa Sanoh were released on 19 December 2019 after being handed a four-month sentence, including a three-month suspended sentence, by the Tribunal of Kindia in Guinea. Thierno Seydi Ly and Thierno Oumar Barry were acquitted and released. The five members of pro-democracy coalition National Front for the Defense of the Constitution (FNDC in French) had been detained for 36 days, charged with participation in an unauthorized gathering. Having spent more than one month in prison, they were released on the same day. Their lawyer filled an appeal against the judgement.

After his release, Alseny Farinta, local coordinator of FNDC in Kindia, said the following to an Amnesty International staff member: "The first days of prison were difficult, but with pressure from media, national and international organizations like Amnesty, the situation gradually improved.
